This is the way men, who are some tillating wits abroad, who keep the tilisting wits abroad, who keep the table in a roar, excite themselves for being dull and grouchy and silent at the domestic breakfast table. They hold that a wife is so lacking in a sense of humor that she is no good even to try out a new loke on.

Perhaps it has been true that the weman of the past had little sense of humor and didn't laugh much. They hadn't much to laugh about. Tears were their portion, and in our grand-mother's time when women met together they sat up and told one sat other mountful stories of trouble and affliction, and recounted all of the painful details of sickbeds and deathroom scenes.

other montreal stories of trouble and affliction, and recounted all of the painful details of sickbeds and death-room scenes.

But the evolution of women is bringing with it an clongation of their funny-bone. Their sense of humor is beginning to develop. They laugh more, and now when they meet together they exchange tokes instead of symptoms and particulars of their instance that women have progressed. It shows they are getting a real sense of proportion in life, and that is what a sense of humor is—in its last analysis.

Heaven knows that of all things on earth women most need this sense of humor? Ferhaps it is because they haven't had it that they have hade tragedles out of things that might have been turned into comedies.

For instance, the other day the newspapers contained an account of a woman who had had her husbend arrested for assumit and battery. The next day when she appeared before the judge with her eyes blackened, minus two leeth, and with her ip apili so she could hardly speak, she said that she desired to withdraw her charge.

"For what reason?" inquired the fudge. "You seem to me to be about as had a wreak as ever appeared before this court. Sent it true that your hisband inflicted these bruises upon you?" "Ch. yes, your hour," replied the woman. "But I didn't understand when my husband heat me and I had dim arrested that he was list playing a practical toke mon me. not one of those wemen who have no sense of humor and can't take a joke. Think, if this apirit could become universal among wemen, how beneficent would be its result. Take the matter of the drunken husband, for instance. We all know how excructatingly amusing a drunken man is on the stage, and how gladly we give up $2.00 of our hard-earned money to see a comedian give a lifetke representation of a man on a spree.

Yet there are thousands of women movi.—and send it mon.
